

5 ways life sciences companies are redefining the workplace

Shape a sustainable, resilient and inclusive future

1

Healthcare and life sciences decision-makers will drive actions against multiple CRE priorities over the next three years

Decision-makers say they are focused on:

- Improving workforce resilience
- Operationalizing hybrid work models
- Improving operational efficiency

2

Hybrid will have a lasting impact on the healthcare and life sciences sector

74% of decision-makers agree that offering remote / hybrid working options will be critical to attract and retain talent

3

Healthcare and life sciences will prioritize investment in high-quality space

79% agree that investing in quality is a greater priority than expanding the total footprint compared to 77% globally

4

Rising employee expectations will lead to an acceleration of investment in ESG

72% say their employees will increasingly expect the workplace to have a positive impact on the environment

49% will accelerate investment into embedding circular design principles into fit-outs and refurbishments

5

Diversity, inclusion and employee well-being are high on the agenda

67% consider improving workforce resilience to be a key strategic objective

53% will increase investment into improving diversity and inclusion

